A: This seems like a null reference exception to me. foreach (var v in detailViewModel.viewModel) { var template = v.ReportUser; ReportViewModel.clinicsbylocation = new[] { template.clinic2name }; } v is null in that line (checked by putting a breakpoint there). You can't assign null to an array like you are doing in this line. Here's the source of the where the error is probably happening. A: First of all, welcome to the world of dynamic programming! It's not one I'm personally familiar with, but you're off to a fantastic start. In order to help you with debugging null exceptions, you can try putting a breakpoint at the line causing the exception and look at the local variable value. That will give you additional information as to what is null, and if you're lucky, the stack trace will tell you more information (that's the most difficult part of debugging, so a "good luck" is in order). However, if you do this you will find that your variable values are not null (since you checked if they are null just before the exception occurs), but that v.ReportUser is null. That is a different problem - you need to make sure that v.ReportUser is not null or you will continue getting nulls all over the place. For example, if you have this code: if (v == null) { return null; } var template = v.ReportUser; After debugging you'll notice that v.ReportUser is null, but as you know that v!= null, the rest of the line is able to continue, and the first return statement is executed. Something similar happens here: foreach (var v in detailViewModel.viewModel) { if (v == null) { return null; } var template = v.ReportUser; ReportViewModel.clinicsbylocation = new[] { template.clinic2name }; } Since v.ReportUser is null, you exit the loop, and even though v is not null, the line return null; 1cb139a0ed
